Grain Export Company Marks 55 Years of Global Leadership

United Grain Corporation, a key player in the Pacific Northwest’s internationally renowned grain export industry, is commemorating 55 years of safely and reliably nourishing the world.

“We take immense pride in our 55-year legacy of nourishing the world and look forward to continued success — not just for our company but also the communities we serve,” said United Grain Chief Executive Officer and President Augusto Bassanini. “Our team is committed to living by our core values of reliability, integrity, inclusivity, and safety,” he added.

Over the last 55 years, the company has grown from a single export facility in Vancouver, Washington to becoming the Port of Vancouver USA’s largest tenant, accounting for the vast majority of the port’s export volumes while adding 14 inland facilities across five states. The company’s flagship export facility in Vancouver boasts the largest grain storage capacity on the West Coast at 220,000 metric tons. United Grain’s inland rail and barge facilities feed the export terminal, enabling the loading of approximately 100 ocean-going vessels bound for markets across Asia, Central and South America, and the Middle East each year.

“In the global grain trade, reliability and product safety are paramount,” Bassanini said. “As a company, we continue to emphasize the importance of trust, nurture our relationships, and prioritize safety, demonstrating year after year the unwavering value we bring to our producers, suppliers, and global customers.”
